The S. epidermidis sequences have antibacterial activity and can be used in gene therapy. The sequences can also be used in the diagnosis and treatment of bacterial infections, particularly S. epidermidis infections. The sequences can be used to screen for compounds able to interfere with the S. epidermidis life cycle or inhibit S. epidermidis infection.

CRAH52304 to AAH53970 represent nucleic acids (I) encoding polypeptides (II), given in AAG81454 to AAG83120, from Staphylococcus epidermidis. CC (II) and (II) can have antibacterial activity and therefore can be used in vaccination. The nucleic acids (I) may be used to produce the CC s. epidermidis polypeptides (II) via the production of vectors containing them which are used to produce hosts cells which express the CC polypeptides. The polypeptides (II) (and/or nucleic acids) may then be CC used to vaccinate subjects and to raise antibodies against the bacteria. CC The polypeptides may also be used to assay for other inhibitors of their activity and therefore identify compounds that may be used for the CC treatment of S. epidermidis infections, e.g. endocarditis. AAH53971 to CC AAH55090 represent specifically claimed S. epidermidis genomic DNA CC polypucleotide sequences from the present invention. AAH55091 to CC AAH55098 represent oligonucleotide sequences and primers which are used in the exemplification of the present invention. AAH55091 to CC AAH55098 represent invention specifically claims all the polypucleotide sequences given in the sequence listing of the present specification, CC however the sequence listing only goes up to SEQ ID NO:4454 so even though sequences are given in the disclosure for SEQ ID NO:4465 to 4472, con sequences are present for SEQ ID NO:4465.

The transformants and recombinant enzyme produced can be used in fermentation processes e.g in baking and brewing. The transformed yeasts are esp. suitable for prodn. of low carbohydrate beers.

One positive cosmid (32kb; pYc1) was digested with EcoRI, religated and used to transform E.coli JA221. Positive transformants contain pYc1-alpha, which includes a 5kb EcoRI fragment contg. the gene in AAN81525.

Nucleic acids encoding (I) are used to detect Streptococcus in a biological sample. (I) is used to determine whether a compound binds to (I). A composition comprising (I) or a nucleic acid encoding (I), may be used as a vaccine or diagnostic composition. The disease caused by Streptococcus that is prevented or treated may be meningitis. Nucleic acid encoding (I) may be used to recombinantly produce (I) and may be used in gene therapy. Antibodies to (I) are used for affinity

The S. epidermidis sequences have antibacterial activity and can be used in gene therapy. The sequences can also be used in the diagnosis and treatment of bacterial infections, particularly S. epidermidis infections. The sequences can be used to screen for compounds able to interfere with the S. epidermidis life cycle or inhibit S. epidermidis infection.

The nucleic acid sequence is useful in the detection and/or amplification nucleic acid sequence, particularly to identify Lactococcus lactis or related species. The proteins of the invention are useful for the biosynthesis or biodegradation of a composition of interest. The invention helps research in lactic bacteria, particularly useful in the production of yogurt and cheese.

                                                                                                    The present invention relates to the genome sequence of Listeria monocytogenes EGD-e (see ABA03041). The genome sequence and fragments of it are useful for selecting probes and primers for detecting genes in L. monocytogenes and related organisms, and for studying genetic polymorphisms and other genomes. The present sequence is a protein encoded by the genome sequence of the present invention. Proteins expressed from the genome sequence are useful for raising specific antibodies, identification of L. monocytogenes and related organisms, are for biosynthesis and biodegradation, especially biosynthesis of Vitamin B12.
